What is exclamatory sentence and example. Assertive to exclamatory sentences examples with answers. What are 10 examples of exclamatory sentences.

An exclamatory sentence makes a statement that conveys strong emotion or excitement. Placing that tiny stripe above a period at the end of a sentence can really rock the boat! For example: "I got the concert tickets!" "Ugh! Why are you yelling at me?" "I'm not!" Have you ever had a text conversation go something like that? Your friend is trying to convey excitement and instead of throwing in some emojis, she uses exclamation marks. No big deal, but it can come across as a different kind of emotion, like anger or frustration. exclamatory sentence: You are amazing! In truth, exclamation marks are like sugar. Sometimes they can be too much. So, be careful if you just mean to say, "I need some coffee," rather than "I need some coffee!" the next time you're contemplating this magical bean. Your tone, the emphasis you place on certain words, and your inflection can all change the meaning — and possibly the urgency — of your sentence. Let's take a look at some exclamatory sentence examples. We've broken them up into their most common categories. Happy birthday, Amy! Thank you, Sheldon! I hate you! Ice cream sundaes are my favorite! Exclamatory sentences are so powerful they can stand alone. For example: Wow, I really love you! Fantastic, let's go! In these instances, you don't have to divide the sentiment into two separate sentences. Instead, insert a comma where the speaker would naturally pause and then finish off with that indicator of excitement, the exclamation mark. Exclamatory Sentences That Begin with "What." What a lovely bouquet of flowers! What a cute puppy! What an ugly bug! What a happy ending! Exclamatory Sentences That Begin with "How." How bright they've grown in the sunlight! How well he listens! How slow they crawl! How fast you ran! Exclamatory Sentences Containing "So." That birthday cake was so good! Sheldon's gift was so amazing! Eugh, that bug is so ugly! I'm so mad right now! He's such a kind soul! That's such a gorgeous ring! Your puppy is such a cutie! You're such a liar! Exclamatory sentences don't really have a place in academic writing or reports. Short of quoting someone else, they are to be avoided. Academic papers are going to be filled with declarative sentences, which make a statement, or interrogative sentences, which pose a question. Declarative sentences relay information, plain and simple. They're always punctuated by a period. Interrogative sentences ask questions and they're punctuated by a question mark. An imperative sentence is also not used much in academic writing, but if you see it in other writing it may be confused with an exclamatory sentence as it can also end with an exclamation point. The difference to remember is that an exclamatory sentence will always express heightened emotion. In the end, it's best to leave exclamatory sentences for the lighter side of life. It's okay to create a casual blog post with an exclamatory sentence or two. A script for an episode of Friends will be full of exclamatory sentences — and that's why we loved it so much. However, a paper focusing on the benefits of herbal medicine should be far less driven by exclamations. Let your writing speak for itself. Choose clear, concise tones and avoid the urge to place that stripe above your periods (!). Staff Writer Example Sentences, Speaking Exclamatory Sentences Sentences containing surprise or emotion are called exclamation sentences. An exclamation point is placed at the end of such sentences. The exclamation words used in the exclamation sentences where sudden changing emotions and thoughts are told give information about the course of the sentence. For example, it is certain that a sentence that starts with the word alas will tell a bad situation or a sentence that begins to live in a happy situation is immediately understood. When we examine the exclamation words used in English, it is not difficult to understand which situation is mentioned. Now let's examine what exclamation words in English are used and in what situations: Examples Ooo, are you here! Wow, you didn't win the exam! How beautiful this city is! Sara, wipe the board! Woe, I missed the service! Don't talk, get out! Please, help me now! Hah, okay, now it's beautiful! What a coincidence this is! Wait, that bridge is rotten! Prev Article Next Article Exclamatory Sentences are the sentences those express a strong emotion, which could be anger, joy, sorrow, excitement, surprise etc. The emotional zeal in the sentences is represented by the exclamation mark (!), without it, any exclamatory sentence is only a Declarative Sentence. To represent a greater degree of emotion, exclamatory sentences may be terminated with more than one exclamation mark. Do you remember texting your friend- "My father allowed me to go on picnic!" By putting an exclamation mark at the end of your statement you conveyed your level of excitement (happiness) to your friend. Now, what if you had texted- "My father allowed me to go on picnic", to your friend. Does it sound similar to the previous sentence, or does it lack something? The latter sentence is just a Declarative Statement simply delivering a message, without any excitement or emotion; while the former reflects that the sender is happy and excited. When conversing vocally, your tone decides whether the sentence is exclamatory or not. If you walked into a restaurant and said -"I need hot coffee!" said in a higher tone or raised voice it indicates your urgency; otherwise, you could have just stated "I need hot coffee" and waited for it to be delivered to you. We will go through few exclamatory sentences below, also identifying the emotions they represent- What have you done! (Anger) Hurrah! The trophy is ours!! (Joy) I lost my purse! (Sorrow) I like ice creams! (Excitement) Wonderful house you have got! (Excitement) What a beautiful day!! (Excitement) What is this!! (Surprise) This is the last time I am warning you! (Anger) We are going for a movie tonight! (Excitement/Joy) Wish he had been with us!! (Sorrow) What a beautiful house! (Excitement) Ronny, we are selected for the tournament! (Excitement/Happiness) Further we will go through the rules of forming and identifying Exclamatory Sentences and identifying the emotions they represent. Rules There are certain rules to be followed while forming or even identifying exclamatory sentences. Below we will go through the rules of Exclamatory Sentences- Rule 1 - An Exclamatory Sentence Never Delivers a Command Do keep in mind that exclamatory sentences cannot give command; as only imperative sentences give command. Therefore sentences like- Get off my way! (Command) Watch out your steps! (instruction) Do the work I gave you! (instruction) are not Exclamatory Sentences, even though they seem to deliver emotions of anger and frustration. Rule 2 - An Exclamatory Sentence always has a subject Given to the situation an Exclamatory Sentence always has a subject and a predicate. Go through the following statement- What a beautiful day! Hurray, we won the match! I love you! There is a snake in the backyard! I saw my favorite movie! Oh No! He is not coming to the party! All of the above sentences are exclamatory and have clear subjects. Some sentences at first sight do look like exclamatory sentences but they are not. Go through the below sentences- Happy Birthday! Merry Christmas! The above sentences are not exclamatory, but imperative; it is making a wish and the subject (you) is not mentioned. Therefore, special care must be taken before deciding on whether the sentence is Exclamatory or not. Rule 3 - Don't over-use the Exclamatory Sentences While it is ok to use more than one exclamation mark to express a strong emotion but the overuse of exclamation marks should be avoided in case of grouped statements. For Example, go through the statement below- I was late! I hurried up! I reached on time! The above set of sentences seems a little inappropriate as the exclamation mark after every sentence makes the speaker look like less serious. The most appropriate version of the above sentences should be- I was late. I hurried up. I reached on time! Therefore, while dealing with a set of statements, we must avoid the over formation of Exclamatory Sentences. Exclamatory Sentences Beginning with Interrogative Clause (What/How) It must be kept in mind that even though if the exclamatory sentence begins with What/How, it is not a question and is always terminated with an Exclamation (!). Kindly go through the below examples- What a beautiful day! What a precise plan! What a gentle man he is! What a lovely flower! What a cute baby! How beautiful it is! How fast it went! How slow the ship sailed! How easy it was! How interesting the match was! Practice forming more Exclamatory Sentences beginning with interrogative clauses- Why/How Exclamatory Sentences with So/Such 'So' is an adverb and 'Such' is a determiner; also, in exclamatory sentences 'so' is paired with an adjective and 'such' is paired with a noun. Go through the examples given below- He is so cute! The man was so huge! It was so big! I was so late! It had been so tiring! He is such a gentleman! He was such a jerk! It was such a beautiful day! She is such a spoiler! Use of Interjections in Exclamatory Sentences (Wow! Alas! Hurray! /Wow!/Ouch!) The Exclamatory Sentences may begin with interjections- Alas! (Sorrow), Hurray! (Joy), Wow! (Surprise), Ouch! (Pain) etc, to provide more strength to the emotion, though, the interjection must also be terminated with an Exclamation (!). Go through the below examples- Alas! I forgot the keys! (Sorrow) Hurray! We won the match! (Joy) Wow! He presented me a watch! (Surprise) Ouch! This chair hurts! (Pain) Wow! What a beautiful tree! (Surprise) Direct - Indirect Exclamatory Sentences Converting Direct Exclamatory Sentences into Indirect Exclamatory Sentences We will begin with converting a direct Exclamatory Sentence into an Indirect Exclamatory Sentence; and, further analyze the changes we made to define the set of rules for the conversion. Let us begin with below give Direct Exclamatory Sentence- She said, "We are going to the party!" Now try converting the above sentence into an Indirect Sentence; try to form a sentence without comma (,) and an Exclamation (!). The best possible representation is the sentence given below- She exclaimed that they were going to the party. Note the changes that have been made- 1) Reporting verb 'Said' is replaced with 'Exclaimed'. 2) Conjunction word 'That' is used. 3) Change the tense of the exclamatory verb to past tense i.e. 'are' changes to 'were'. 4) Remove the commas (,) quotation marks (" ") and exclamation marks (!). We will further go through some more direct exclamatory sentences and their indirect forms given below- Direct: She said, "What a wonderful surprise!" Indirect: She exclaimed excitedly that the surprise was wonderful. Direct: He said in the stadium, "Hurray! We won the match!" Indirect: He exclaimed joyfully in stadium that they had won the match. Direct: She said, "What! I don't believe it!" Indirect: She exclaimed surprisingly that she didn't believe it. Direct: They said, "How Did it happen!" Indirect: They exclaimed surprisingly that how did it happened. Direct: The spectators said, "What a great movie!" Indirect: The spectators applauded the movie by saying that it was great. Direct: She said, "What! He is not coming." Indirect: She exclaimed with surprise that he is not coming. Exclamatory Sentences to Assertive Sentences An Assertive Sentence is a declarative sentence with a subject and a predicate. Therefore, while converting from Exclamatory to Assertive Sentences, the subject and the verbs remains the same with few changes as mentioned below- 1) Interrogative Clauses How/What are replaced by Very/Great. Go through the following examples- Exclamatory: How beautiful the flower is! Assertive: The flower is very beautiful. In the above transformation we note that the subject (flower) remains the same as well as the adjective (beautiful); but 'how' is replaced by 'very'. Now, go through a sentences beginning with What- Exclamatory: What a king he is! Assertive: He is a great king. 2) The interjections are replaced by - "It is a matter of + emotions that they represent" While converting from Exclamatory to Assertive Sentences, the interjections are replaced by the sentence- "It is a matter of + emotion that the interjection represents"; as given below- Alas! - "It is a matter of sorrow" Hurray! - "It is a matter of joy" Bravo! - "It is a matter of joy" Please go through the examples given below- Exclamatory: Hurray! We won the match! Assertive: It is a matter of joy that we won the match. Exclamatory: Bravo! He is up again! Assertive: It is a matter of joy that he is up again! Despite the above stated rules, the punch line to change any given exclamatory sentence into an assertive sentence is that you just have to use your basic grammatical knowledge of forming a sentence.
